11 vying for seven seats on council

BY LEA SMALDON
Review Staff

There's no shortage of choices for who will form the next Didsbury municipal council, with races declared yesterday for both mayor and council seats.

At the close of municipal nominations yesterday, nine people filed papers indicating their interest to run for six council seats.

And two people filed nomination papers to run for the mayor's seat.

Candidates had until noon today to withdraw from the race, if they so chose.

Mayor contenders as of yesterday include Rick Lavigne and incumbent Brian Wittal.

Councillor contenders include Donald Lavar Adams, Ken Anderson, Rayburn Anderson, Robert Davidson, and incumbent councillors Rick Mousseau, Gail Nowlan, Ernie Ryckman, and Gayle Veno, as well as Peter Versluis.

Under the Local Authorities Election Act, the list of nominees will not become official until today, Tuesday, Sept. 21 at noon.

"It is both encouraging and exciting to see so many people willing to put their names forward to represent the citizens of Didsbury on town council. Didsbury citizens are going to have a challenging time choosing from this field of strong candidates," said Didsbury CAO Roy Brown.

Candidates are expected to speak on issues important to their election campaign and answer questions from the public during an all-candidates forum scheduled for Sept. 29 in the multi purpose room of the Memorial Complex.

Residents can cast their ballots between 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. on October 18 for their council candidate choices in the multi-purpose room of the Memorial Complex.

An advance poll will be held Monday, October 4, in the council chambers of the Didsbury municipal office for those unable to vote on Oct. 18.

Argument escalates outside PetroCan

A fight between a 50-year-old couple erupted outside the PetroCan in Cremona last Friday morning. The two, from Calgary, were spending time at the Elkton Valley campsite nearby. They drove in to fuel up and what witnesses say started as a verbal argument turned physical when the man grabbed the woman and took the keys of the truck before peeling away. Olds and Didsbury RCMP responded. The man could face up to four charges for domestic abuse, two charges for breach of judicial conditions and driving offences. The case is still under investigation. Witnesses and video surveillance captured the argument.

Suspected group of men up to no good

A group of men were seen on the rooftop behind the Didsbury Inn on September 12. Witnesses called 911 just after 1:30 in the morning. A man was seen around the same time walking down 19th Avenue with a large stick and breaking glass. Police patrolled the areas but the men were gone before they got there. The two incidents are considered related.

Driving pattern alerts police

A 24-year-old man from Olds driving in a zigzag pattern in downtown Didsbury last week caught the attention of RCMP. The man was pulled over around 2:40 a.m. and the police member saw a bag of cannabis marijuana when he approached the window. No charges were laid, but the three grams of marijuana were seized and the driver's licence was suspended for 24 hours for driving while impaired by drug.

Nomination deadline extended in CESD

No one files by deadline to represent Didsbury, Olds

BY PAUL FREY
For the Review

The nomination deadline in Chinook's Edge School Division has been extended until September 27.

Nobody had come forward in the Olds/Reed Ranch ward nor the Didsbury ward as of the nomination deadline, so it has been extended.

In four of the wards (Deblurne/Elmira, Bowden/Spruce View, Sundre and Carstairs/Cremona) candidates were acclaimed while in Sylvan Lake, Penhold/River

Glen/Poplar Ridge and Innisfail, there will be races. In Deblurne/Elmira, incumbent Colleen Butler has been acclaimed, while in Bowden/Spruce View, incumbent Connie Huelsman was acclaimed as were incumbents Ron Fisher in Sundre and Bill MacFarquhar in

Carstairs/Cremona. The race in Sylvan Lake will be between Joe-Anne Kispel-Matejka and Greg Shannon, while in Penhold/River Glen/Poplar Ridge, incumbent Sherry Cooper will take on Serena King for the seat. A threeway race in Innisfail will see incumbent Penny Archibald battle it out with Derek Baird and Don Bester.

Potential candidates for the vacant wards can file nomination papers between 10 a.m. and noon each day until a candidate has been found or Sept. 27. Nomination papers can be picked up at the division office in Innisfail or by calling the returning officer, Marlys Kaiser at (403) 507-0673. People can vote for the candidates at the same time and place as they vote for town council candi-

In the Red Deer Catholic Division, there will be a race in the Innisfail/Bowden/Olds/Didsbury ward between incumbent Dianne McKay and Tonya Schaber, while in the Red Deer ward incumbents Elaine Halter, Adriana LeGrange, board chair Christine Moore and Duane Rolheiser will take on newcomers David Bouchard, Guy Pelletier and Anne Marie Watson for the five seats available.

In the Highway 11 ward, Liam McNiff has been acclaimed.

18 candidates line up in Mountain View County

BY JOHN GLEESON
For the Review

Mountain View County will have election races in all seven divisions after 18 candidates filed nomination papers by yesterday's noon deadline.

Among the surprises, the Div. 6 seat soon to be vacated by Coun. Liz Negropontes became the most hotly contested division in the county with a total of five candidates running for the seat, including three who were previously undeclared — William Davies, Ken Heck, and Hans Ullmann.

At the top of his list of reasons for seeking election in Div. 6, Davies, a member of the municipal planning commission, wrote: "I do not want Paddy Munro to be our councillor."

Munro, the former president of the Rural Roots Association, and Bob Nerrie are also running in Div. 6.

Among other surprises, Div. 5 became a three-way race with the addition of Linda Burrell, a former councillor and the current chair of MPC. Burrell will go up against Verna McFadden and Robert Orr for the seat vacated by Coun. Gerald Ingveid.

Conversely, in Div. 4 the race narrowed to two candidates — incumbent Kathy Blain and Ag Services Board chair Bruce Beattie — after Olympic hockey coach Marty Yewchuk dropped out on the eve of the nomination deadline.

In an e-mail sent to the Gazette Sunday night, Yewchuk cited "a change in my present life situation" for his decision not to run, adding: "I wish the best of luck to the remaining candidates in all divisions."

The list of candidates was unofficial yesterday, as they are allowed 24 hours to withdraw their names after filing. They are:

- Div. 1 — Gwen Day (incumbent), Kevin Good;

- Div. 2 — Patricia McLean, Lana Yakimchuk (incumbent);
- Div. 3 — Duncan Milne, Everett Page (incumbent);
- Div. 4 — Bruce Beattie, Kathy Blain (incumbent);
- Div. 5 — Linda Burrell, Verna McFadden, Robert Orr;
- Div. 6 — William Davies, Ken Heck, Paddy Munro, Bob Nerrie, Hans Ullmann;
- Div. 7 — Al Kemmere, Mike Radford.

A Div. 7 candidates forum will be held this Thursday, Sept. 23 at Reed Ranch School, starting at 7 p.m.

Div. 2 candidates will be part of an election forum for the Village of Cremona on Oct. 4 at the Cremona Community Hall, from 7-9 p.m.

Details on a countywide candidates forum planned for Oct. 5 at Olds College, as well as more about the candidates, will appear in next week's Gazette.

Firearms vote a major milestone but not final say

DAN SINGLETON

When MPs vote on a private member's bill this week regarding the national long gun registry it will be the latest showdown in a long, long line of Parliamentary debates and public arguments stretching back more than a decade.

Whether the vote, which is scheduled for September 22, will finally bring an end to the controversy over gun ownership in Canada, and in particular, whether making gun owners register their rifles and shotguns does or does not serve the greatest public interest, remains anyone's guess.

What is certain is that many Canadians probably hope that after the vote MPs will finally be able to move on to other more pressing issues, such as health care and education funding and its impact on the day-to-day lives of Canadians everywhere, including in West Central Alberta.

Proposed by Conservative MP Candice Hoeppner, Bill C-391 calls for the scrapping of the legal requirement for owners to register their long guns.

For his part, Wild Rose Conservative MP Blake Richards has been a vocal supporter of Hoeppner's bill, saying getting rid of the registry of long guns is long overdue.

Richards has called on MPs to "do the right thing, listen to their constituents, and vote to scrap the registry once and for all."

"The long-awaited opportunity to end the registry is at hand," says Richards.

Supporters of the registry, including some chiefs of police, health-care professionals and women's groups, say the registry is a valuable tool that should be retained.

Since the registry was first put in place by the former Liberal government, controversy over it has raged back and forth, pitting parties against parties, MPs against MPs, regions against regions, and rural residents against city residents.

And through it all the sides have remained far, far apart, as they are today.

So wouldn't it be nice if all MPs would accept the results of this week's vote as final, agreeing to stop spending public money and Parliamentary time on an issue that has, some might say, received more than its fair share of attention and effort over the past many years?

There's no question that if this week's vote does mark the end of the firearms debate, at least for the next several years, it will be warmly welcomed by many people from coast to coast.

However, such hopes may be just a little too much to ask from those MPs who have made supporting or opposing gun control their political bread and butter for years.

The bottom line is that although this week's vote will be a major milestone in the gun debate, it probably won't be the final word - after all, who doesn't want gun ownership to be a major, front-and-centre issue in the next federal election campaign?

Commentary

Cut-rate tuition a bad deal for taxpayers

BEN EISEN

Not all university students are created equal. While all of them may share the same fear of final exams, they don't all share the same fear of the tuition bills they are paying.

That's because tuition levels vary widely from province to province. Full-time undergraduates in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario, for example, pay an average of over $5,000 per year in tuition fees, while undergraduates in Manitoba pay just $3,400. In Quebec, tuition fees are even lower - students there pay an average of just $2,300.

Students (and their parents) love low tuition fees, but they unfortunately represent an inefficient and unnecessarily expensive policy approach for financing postsecondary education.

The development of a well-educated workforce is universally recognized as essential for Canada's prosperity, and most people agree that a high level of participation in post-secondary education is good for the country. Low tuition levels, however, are unnecessary to achieving that objective because a large portion of the benefits of postsecondary education are experienced by the students themselves in the form of higher expected lifetime earnings.

The financial benefits of a university degree are substantial: we can therefore count on large numbers of young people to recognize it is in their own self-interest to pursue a higher education, even if the tuition fees are not as low as those enjoyed in Manitoba and Quebec.

In fact, a 2007 study for Statistics Canada examined postsecondary education participation rates across Canada and found they were strikingly similar in Saskatchewan and Manitoba despite the fact they were much higher in Saskatchewan. The analysis showed 76 per cent of young adults in Saskatchewan had participated in some form of postsecondary education, compared to 72 per cent in Manitoba. For university participation specifically, 44 per cent of young people in Saskatchewan had attended university, exactly the same as in Manitoba. Similarly, Ontario actually showed a higher university participation rate than Quebec despite the fact its tuition levels are more than twice as high.

In short, the evidence suggests that while the cheap tuition offered by Manitoba and Quebec strains government budgets it does little to boost postsecondary participation.

Any proposal to increase tuition rates is always met with howls of protest (often from students themselves), the main argument being that higher tuition will reduce access for young people from economically disadvantaged families. But this issue can be addressed more efficiently by offering targeted subsidies and favourable loans to provide assistance to individuals who have a real financial need.

Targeted subsidies and favourable loans, in fact, would better ensure equality of access, but at less cost to the taxpayer, than low tuitions which subsidize the affluent as well as the disadvantaged.

In fact, the benefits of low tuition levels flow disproportionately to economically comfortable members of society. University students are much more likely to have grown up in affluent families, and have, on average, higher lifetime earnings than people who do not advance beyond high school who, while not pursuing a post-secondary education themselves and do not receive the benefits of low tuitions, are still required to pay some of the costs through higher taxes on their earnings, a regressive subsidy.

Besides doing little or nothing to boost university participation and are an inefficient strategy for ensuring access to higher education, the real effect of rock-bottom tuition in Manitoba and Quebec is to transfer public funds into the pockets of society's wealthier and better educated. A smarter and fairer policy is to require students to pay similar tuition to that paid in the other provinces, while using scarce public funds where they are really needed.

Arts council seeks society status

BY LEA SMALDON
Review Staff

One group's bid to incorporate a new non-profit in Didsbury is intended to help turn the town into an art destination.

During a recent meeting, enough people organizing under the Didsbury Arts Council were in agreement on a goal for the group that they are now moving forward with incorporation as a society.

"Basically our idea is to promote Didsbury artists but to (also) try and make Didsbury an art destination. So to bring in venues and events here into Didsbury, and to bring people into Didsbury to see that, but also to promote the local talent," said Sharon Tsiras.

Since first meeting last spring to discuss the creation of an arts council, committee members have drawn as many as 35 people to meetings.

The seven who met Sept. 9 are planning to create an executive board of directors at their next meeting planned for Oct. 21 where the application to Corporate Registries for incorporation can be signed.

"So then our next step is lets see if we can get some money to bring some of these artists into town and see if we have a good audience. If we have the audience then our next step is OK, let's go after a building."

"So then our next step is lets see if we can get some money to bring some of these artists into town and see if we have a good audience. If we have the audience then our next step is OK, let's go after a building," said Tsiras.

Incorporation as a society will help in the endeavour to raise money, said Tsiras.

Existing facilities in the area, while good for what they were designed for, lack in performance space, said Tsiras.

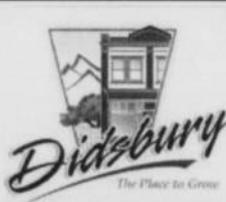

"We get a lot of questions like 'well Olds just built a building so why do you need a building?' Well, Olds built a building, but from a performance perspective, there's no dressing rooms, no backstage, there's no prop storage, (and) the stage is quite small," she said, adding that she thinks Olds has a fantastic facility, it's just not suitable for what the group is envisioning.

Didsbury could be a place people come to from other locations to enjoy a jazz band performance in the park or a theatre performance, shop, eat and go home again, she said.

"We're hoping that city artists are going to say 'you know what, let's go out to Didsbury because they have a hall that we can rent for cheaper than we can in Calgary and let's put our production on out there. So that means lots of traffic coming and going," she said.

While Tsiras' interests lie more with the performing arts, she said visual arts will also be a focus of the Didsbury Arts Council.

She intends to begin discussions with the Wellspring Visual ArtNetwork about possible collaboration.

Community groups showcase their interests

Lea Smaldon/Didsbury Review

Crowds gathered around booths during Showcase Didsbury last week to find out more information about volunteer opportunities and participation schedules for various clubs.

Crowds gathered at the Didsbury curling rink last Thursday during Showcase Didsbury to check out what community groups have to offer this year.

More than 40 booths were set up and manned by sporting groups, health-related service providers, service clubs, hobby groups, community associations, and protective service providers like fire and police.

It was an opportunity for residents to become reacquainted with long-standing groups, register for the upcoming season's offerings, and learn about new opportunities.

For Ole Loberg, the event held promise of finding a new hobby group or club he and his wife could join.

Loberg and his wife moved to Didsbury from Regina in recent weeks and he said they were looking for groups to socialize with. After checking out the Fun Flyers members Robert Deisman and Ray Arie were on hand to demonstrate their radio controlled airplanes, answer questions, and of course drum up new members for the already 25-strong club.

The Didsbury Lions was one group at the event on a membership drive like they've never had before.

President Ray Lea said the club is now actively seeking female members, a demographic not sought after in the past.

"Our club for the longest time was not co-ed. And now everyone has accepted that fact and the guys are really trying to push it now," said Lea, adding females have never officially been excluded from joining the Lions Club, it just wasn't promoted.

Door-to-door energy sales pitch concerns residents

LEA SMALDON

Review Staff

Didsbury residents may have been unwitting participants last week in an ongoing utility company battle for customers that local residents say includes questionable sales practices.

Police received numerous complaints last week about a door-to-door salesperson purporting to renew energy contracts.

Sheree Andrews said she was sceptical when a man wearing a Just Energy badge, carrying a Direct Energy bill on his clipboard tried to convince her that he represented her energy supplier, Direct Energy.

"He didn't have any information on me so how is he coming to my door to renew my contract if he doesn't even know my name?" said Andrews.

He made it seem like she needed to re-sign a contract with him or else she would be hit with higher rates, Andrews said.

She refused to show him one of her energy bills when he asked and she said he tried to convince her that because Direct Energy is a U.K.-based company, his company was their representative here.

She ended the sales call by telling him she didn't believe he was from Direct Energy and that she would contact the energy provider herself to talk about her contract.

Direct Energy was not conducting door-to-door sales in Didsbury last Thursday night, confirmed Lynsey MacRae, a public relations manager with Direct Energy.

It's possible that competing utility service provider Just Energy was, but company officials did not return calls last week to confirm or deny sales activity in the area.

"We do know they're out there. They should not be saying they are affiliated with us in any way, shape or form because they're not the same company," MacRae said.

Just Energy is part of the same group of energy provider companies that includes Alberta Energy Savings.

Rogue salespeople from Alberta Energy Savings were recently convicted of fraudulently signing contracts in Innisfail and other places without the customer's consent.

Direct Energy has also had its share of trouble with door-to-door sales. In May of 2009, the company signed an undertaking with the Alberta government to show within five months that sales staff are not misleading consumers and have proper training.

Some sales agents were going door-to-door selling long-term contracts without making it clear that customers were signing up for a separate arm of Direct Energy that deals in the unregulated market, instead of the Direct Energy division that offers the regulated rates.

Both companies have had complaints, including concerns over misleading sales pitches, filed against them with the Better Business Bureau.

Competitive energy retailers have been actively marketing their products and services for several years in Alberta and many employ door-to-door sales tactics. The Office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate hears many versions of what door-to-door and telephone sales people say to convince consumers to sign an energy contract.

MacRae said Direct Energy does have a door-to-door sales arm and employs a strict training and sales process.

"We would absolutely not encourage our sales agents to use inappropriate sales tactics to try and make a sale - so undue pressure is not something we would advocate for and it's definitely not something we would support," MacRae said.

She said door-to-door sales is a successful marketing avenue for Direct Energy.

"I think one of the things that we hear back from customers is that sometimes people appreciate having the opportunity to ask somebody questions at the door. They have the opportunity to ask someone face to face," said MacRae.

Last week's questionable sales calls in Didsbury had many thinking the marketing tool should be on the way out.

"I don't trust salesmen that come to the door. You just don't and I think that marketing is going to have to be gone now because there's so many scam artists you just don't trust anybody that comes," said Andrews.

DR. BRUCE STOVER

Born and raised in Ontario, Dr. Bruce Stover grew up working on a Dairy Farm. In 1996, Bruce moved to British Columbia, became a climbing and skiing guide and then returned to Pre Vet School at Thompson Rivers University in Kamloops B.C. He managed to acquire experience in Dairy and Equine work with Greenbelt Veterinary over a three year period. Bruce worked through Veterinary School in the field of Bovine and Equine reproduction. He developed a special interest in both of these fields. Bruce also has extensive small animal medical and surgical experience, which he clearly enjoys. Bruce graduated from the Western College of Veterinary Medicine in Saskatoon, Sask. in 2009. In August 2010 Bruce joined the team at Didsbury Veterinary Services. Bruce also enjoys riding his horse Montaego and shares his leisure time with his dog Nickel.

Colts set for Saturday's season opener

BY ANDREW WILD
Review Staff

With the regular season set to start, the young Mountainview Colts are still looking to get their legs under them.

Despite a pair of home-ice preseason losses on the weekend, people associated with the local junior B hockey club are still confident the team will come together when they open the Heritage Junior Hockey League season at the Didsbury Memorial Complex on Saturday night against the Banff Academy Bears.

"We haven't had much time to work on our power plays or anything like that but the mental aspect is pretty good," explained third-year forward Taylor Olsen. "This weekend's really our first weekend as a team together after cuts and stuff."

And while the team does have a number of young players there is a core of veteran players that will be required to lead the way in helping those young horses adapt to the rough and tumble world of junior B hockey.

Up front returnees Jason Edwards, Bobby Wills, Cody Issler and last year's leading point-getter Kody Wickham

Andrew Wild/Didsbury Review

Mountainview Colts forwards Taylor Olsen (18) and Jason Edwards (15) jam the front of the net looking for a rebound during Saturday's home exhibition contest with the Three Hills Thrashers.

join Olsen. The defence will be stocked with vets including Matt Richardson, who will anchor the blueline, along with AJHL returnee Braeden Anderson and Gary Lyczewski.

Olsen believes the veteran defence corps will help the team as they blood two new goaltenders following the loss of Devon Dell and Jason Arnason in the off-season.

"Our back-end is looking real good, and we have a few young guys that are going to be fantastic for us," he said. "It's going to be crucial that we've got a lot of main guys back, but the goaltenders are great and that's just the way it is (in junior hockey), so we have to score more goals for them, that's all."

Olsen believes the goals are going to have to be scored by committee with a lineup full of solid role players who'll focus on playing within themselves under new coach Gord Olsen's system.

"We don't really have a lot of skill on our team so we need the hard work and determination from every player on the ice," the Sundre native explained. "It's really important for everyone to come together ... and be like a family."

The team will be looking to improve on last year's 11-19-2-4 record where they finished fourth in the central division before losing a tough five-game series to the Airdrie Thunder in the first round of the playoffs.

The Colts, who lost 5-1 and 5-3 to Okotoks and Three Hills respectively on the weekend, round out their preseason schedule on Wednesday night with a return engagement in Three Hills. Saturday night's home opener will see puck-drop at 8:30 p.m.

High school golfers win zones

BY LEA SMALDON
Review Staff

The Didsbury high school boys golf team is off to provincials next week after placing first at zones.

The team's combined low score of 229 cinched first place for the team during last Tuesday's zone play-offs, beating out second place Sundre which finished the tournament with a 241.

Individual teammates Cole Robertson shot a 77, Taylor Voszler shot a 78, Keifer Paulgaard ended zone play with an 81, and Jason Edwards shot an 88.

Didsbury didn't field a girls team.

Six girls teams competed at zones which were held at the Carstairs Golf Club. Strathcona Tweedsmuir took first place which host Hugh Sutherland coming in second.

Provincial playdowns will be held in Olds and Carstairs Sept. 27 and 28.

Everybody's talking about what's in the classifieds.

Didsbury & District Chamber of Commerce

CALL FOR NOMINATIONS!!

October 16-23, 2010 is Small Business Week and the Didsbury Chamber of Commerce will be celebrating with their Small Business Week Gala on October 16th and the crowning of the Small Business of the Year, along with the New Business of the Year and the Not for Profit Registered Society. These awards are to honour our local entrepreneurs and societies that are the driving force of our community.

We encourage all residents of Didsbury to get involved and nominate your favourite business/society. Nomination forms are available at the Chamber Office or on our web site at www.didsburychamber.ca. The closing date for nominations is October 1st, 2010, so don't delay. Say thank you to your favourite business with a nomination for one of our awards. A full criterion for the nomination is also on our website. Nominees will be announced on October 12th with the awards being presented on October 16th at the Chamber Gala.

Come out and support your nominees by attending the Didsbury & District Small Business Week Gala. Along with award presentations we will have a silent auction to support a local charity, a fabulous dinner (catered by Didsbury Catering and Delights) and an evening of comedy and magic performed by Sheldon Casavant. Tickets are available from Deana Campbell at the Chamber office, 403-335-3265.
